California bill AB499 means that minors don't need parental consent for drugs

Author: Brian D. Hill

In the California legislature, if the assembly bill AB499 passes then it means children from the ages of 12 to 17 no longer need parental consent to get any prescription drugs. This bill is just another attempt by Big Pharma to make it even easier to drug our children in more medications like Prozac, Ritalin, and even the happy pill.

Right when public schools try to push medications or threaten to kick out troublesome students and the parents risking to be carted off to prison plus losing the child to CPS, now AB499 will mean that public schools can push and maybe even attempt to us force to get kids to take whatever prescription medications the public schools demand.

In fact those in California who are concerned about the bill (probably sponsored by Big Pharma) can contact Governor Brown to ask him to veto the AB499 bill before even more kids will be pushed on medications for big Pharma. Also it seems convenient that this assembly bill is being passed right around when anyone considered troublesome, a free-thinker, or is highly creative will be diagnosed with Oppositional Defiant Disorder.

We will see if Big Pharma will have their way with the law once again!
